COMMUNITIES FOR CLEAN STREAMS WEBSITE

Recently, Audubon Naturalist Society (ANS) launched cleanstreams.anshome.org – a new microsite for its Communities for Clean Streams initiative. ANS supports the people and partner organizations in the DC metro area working to protect and restore the region’s streams.

From the site, cleanstreams.anshome.org, visitors will find information about our Creek Critters App and our Water Quality Monitoring program and classes. We are also sharing tips, ideas and suggestions on how individuals can be better stream stewards by making changes in their yards, communities and for their watersheds.

We’re using the site to build an online community. There’s a place for visitors to post upcoming clean stream events, share photos and “Ask a Creek Geek” for help with a clean stream issue or creek critter identification. For our Clean Stream Partners, the site is a resource with tools they can use to promote future Creek Critters app events.

What’s more, cleanstreams.anshome.org will house a revamped Action Center. Here visitors will find information on local policy issues we’re tracking around greener neighborhoods and managing stormwater runoff and fighting threats to streams such as development and pollution. ANS action alerts around these issues will be posted here. Check out the new HTTP://cleanstreams.anshome.org today!
